..... more about our feather & down seating

Will my cushions change shape over time?

Our feathers are sewn into channels to prevent clumping and ensure the correct shape is held. All cushions will get comfy by softening up over time and eventually will conform to the shape of the user. This is the normal enhancement process of natural filled cushions and is not considered a defect.

Where does feather and down come from?

All of the feather and down that Stanton uses is a byproduct of the food industry (like the leather used in apparel and furniture)

How are the feather cushions and pillows constructed?

Our feather pillows and cushions are made with a high quality 100% cotton down proof ticking filled with 50% polyester, 45% sterilized duck feather and 5% sterilized duck down. Back pillows are a channeled feather insert, while seat cushions are a channeled feather jacket surrounding a super plush foam core.

Feathers are coming through my cushion; does this mean my cushion is defective?

Over time a few feathers may work their way through the cushion cover. This is normal, since there must be airflow through the cushion for comfort adjustability. Stanton uses one of the highest rated air perm feather casings on the market to keep feather loss to a minimum.
